

DINSMORE HOMESTEAD

Where History Lives

August 6, 2010

Charles Niquette
Cultural Resource Analysts, Inc.
Corporate Headquarters
151 Walton Avenue
Lexington, KY 40508

Mr. Niquette :

Attached you will find several pictures I took this past Monday, August 2nd, when Russell Quick came to the Dinsmore Homestead in Boone County, Kentucky to study our graveyard. We were so pleased to be able to benefit from his ground penetrating radar and his wonderfully amiable personality. You will see from one of the photographs, several students very interested in what he was doing. Ken Tankersley's field study class from the University of Cincinnati was able to come out the same morning as Dr. Quick and since they had never before used a ground penetrating radar, he was able to share with them his expertise. I think, as a part-time instructor at a local university, the best aspect of this is that the students were able to see someone with a degree they are themselves pursuing, having an enjoyable time in his job.

The Dinsmore Homestead especially appreciates being the beneficiary of your generosity. After Dr. Quick's preliminary study, we are more convinced than ever that we have burial sites outside our graveyard wall and more sites on the inside than there are headstones. We are looking forward to receiving his final analysis, which will be the basis of ongoing research for us. Information from Dr. Quick's study and a mapping of the graveyard by the University of Cincinnati students will be made available to our visitors who, I am sure, will be quite interested in any updates we are able to make to what we already know.

Again, thank you for your generous donation of the equipment, time and personnel for our benefit!

Sincerely,

Catherine T. Collopy
Research & Education Coordinator
Dinsmore Homestead